

Carol Braddick coaches senior leaders and teams in global businesses. She also partners with companies to sharpen their approach to coaching and gain more value from investments in coaching. Based in the UK and Arizona, her practice is supported by a global network of experienced executive coaches and consultants.

Practical and business oriented, she is skilled at distilling the factors that expand a leader's impact on his or her business. Carol works with leaders to 'raise their game' by strengthening stakeholder relationships, building influencing skills and developing their networks. She coaches leaders who want to 'step up'—by making successful transitions into new roles or shifting to higher levels of contribution in their current roles. The leaders she coaches are in the pharmaceutical, financial services, media, defense and technology sectors. On a pro bono basis, she also coaches leaders of selected non-profit organisations.

Her background in executive coaching includes studies with: Fielding Graduate University's Evidence Based Coaching program; Regents College School of Psychotherapy and Counselling Psychology; Management Futures; Lore International Institute; and Oxford Brookes University. Carol is a member of the ICF, APECS (Association of Professional Executive Coaches and Supervisors) and the London chapter of the NeuroLeadership Institute.

Prior to establishing Graham Braddick Partnership, Carol worked with two global consulting firms, Hewitt and Towers Perrin, specialising in talent and OD in the US and Latin America. She was also a Board member of a niche UK consulting firm specialising in management assessment and development. In these roles she managed multicultural project teams, restructured a portfolio of client services, developed new accounts and services, and implemented CRM processes in key countries.

Carol received an MBA in Finance from New York University in 1989 and a BA in Linguistics from Pomona College in 1981. She is proficient in Spanish.
